1

Who did you judge more harshly at the beginning of the novel, Allegra or Emilio? Did your opinion change by the end?

2

Allegra's faith influences many of the choices she makes about love, sex and relationships. Do you think she was living according to her own convictions, or according to what she believed was expected of her?

3

Fitz was Allegra's first and only sexual partner before their relationship ended. How do you think his betrayal changed the way she viewed sex, trust and men?

4

Emilio is open about enjoying sex and makes his expectations clear to the women he sleeps with. Did this affect the way you judged his lifestyle? Do you think sexual freedom and emotional responsibility can coexist?

5

Emilio wants Allegra to feel less inhibited about desire, yet there are moments when he is the one who exercises restraint. What do you think this reveals about him?

6

Allegra's relationship with faith is challenged throughout the novel. Do you think questioning your beliefs can ultimately strengthen them?

7

Emilio has spent much of his adult life separating sex from emotional intimacy. How much do you think our childhood experiences shape the way we love as adults?

8

Both Allegra and Emilio carry wounds into their relationship, but they respond to them very differently. Which character's coping mechanisms did you understand more, and why?

9

What role does forgiveness play in My Sin? Is forgiveness always necessary for healing, and does forgiving someone require reconciliation?

10

Allegra and Emilio approach sex, faith and commitment from very different perspectives. Do you think either of them changes too much for the other, or do they simply understand themselves better by the end?

11

Who, if anyone, needs redemption in this story? What does redemption mean for that character?

12

Was Emilio Allegra's sin, her salvation, both... or neither? And what was Allegra to Emilio?
